

Creative Writing Messages

Message to Myself Poem

Preparation

Without thinking too closely, make a list of as many features or experiences you'd like to see in your future self as you can. Some of these can be serious – your hopes and aspirations – but this is a chance to be as outrageous as you can.

Therefore, in the following poem illustration, here are two 'serious' ideas, but even these are varied:

1. to have passed all your exams [mentioning English, of course] which is perfectly reasonable
2. to have scored a thousand goals [or any other sporting achievement], but this is exaggerated – and could have been even more so if you wanted

The more adventurous idea is something like referring to a trip to Mars, the one phrase returned from suggesting it will have been a definite experience.

By not thinking too closely on your ideas, you can write down virtually anything that comes into your head, and perhaps get into a pattern of thinking up new ideas. These can then be edited later on: some changed, and some simply discarded.

When composing your poem, you can use the pattern in the illustration: this can help by providing a rhythm to your writing. Try to mix up your 'serious' and more adventurous ideas within each set of four lines.

Illustration of possible *Message to Myself Poem

I hope you have been happy

scored a thousand goals returned from that trip to Mars passed all your exams, especially English

I hope you have always washed your hands invented tasty food without calories written the book Homework Made a Doddle for your own children fell deeply in love

I hope you have made up for that big mistake [you know the one] run your fastest time stopped changing your hair colour or continued changing your hair colour

.....and so on