

First

Whilst many people think the hamburger is a global food - and in many ways they are correct - it is in fact a space ship from another planet, saucer-shaped, and the filling we are eating is, disturbingly, its alien inhabitants.

Second

Assuming you are hungry, you could eat this sentence, putting it on a brioche bun, spreading mustard on one half, ketchup on the other, and then adding other fillings of your choice: cheese, extra verbs, [no, one subordinate clause is quite enough], dill pickle, three nouns, and buffalo tomato slices. Never include an exclamation mark - there is no need for drama.